

IMPRISONED IN A CHAIR.

(Cleveland Herald.)

On Tuesday morning there died in Columbus, James Hodgson, a man of whom, an account of his total inability to exercise any control or will power over his body for twenty-three years, it may well be said that he was imprisoned in a living tomb. He was born in England in 1826, and came to this country when nine years of age. He was of strong bodily constitution, and remarkably intelligent. At the age of nineteen he was taken sick with bilious fever, and from a statement found after his death, and which was written in 1873, it appeared that he attributed his fearful malady to the mercurial treatment he was forced to undergo to cure the first disease. He says he was impregnated by the mercurial poison, and felt its first effects about three years after in a lameness of the wrist of the right hand. The disease was treated as rheumatism. Two years later his hands became almost useless, and in the third year after the first symptoms appeared the disease spread to the knees and knee-joints. So rapidly did it progress that for three years following he could devote little of his time to any work. At last in August 1851, when twenty-five years of age, he was compelled to give up all work, and with quiet resignation, he bade his friends place him in the chair from which he was never again to rise.

The bones of his joints now became matted together by his disease in an immovable mass, although for some years Mr. Hodgson could use one of his hands slightly for the purpose of writing. After he entirely lost the use of his hands he passed his time in reading, and the only exercise he had was the occasional backward and forward movements of his rocking-chair, which the weight of his body impelled. In the statement written by him, Mr. Hodgson thanked his relatives and friends for their devotion to him, and he expressed the wish that an examination of his body might be made after his death if it would be of any benefit to suffering humanity and the medical profession. The examination was not made, however, as the nature of the disease was clearly understood. The affection is sub-acute inflammatory rheumatism, sometimes called rheumatic gout, and the bones of the joints become united by matter which gradually hardens, thus producing the condition known as ankylosis.
